who will be the direct beneficiaries of India's quest to be a developed nation by 2047. It is a message that the party has been painstakingly trying to drive home, from connecting with first-time voters assembled at 5,000 locations across the country virtually during the National Election Day celebration on January 25 to the PM addressing them via his Mann Ki Baat on radio to releasing a song asking first-timers to vote for Modi.

How the Young are Wooed

Beyond the prime minister's much-publicised outreach, the BJP machinery on the ground has been meticulously connecting with young voters via vistaraks

Sensing unemployment to be the BJP's Achilles heel, the Congress has made Youth Nyay part of its poll strategy to attract the younger electorate

(full-timers). QR codes, which open 40 slides detailing the prime minister's development work in the past 10 years, have been placed at gyms, playgrounds, clubs and other places frequented by the younger people. Engaging short videos centred around the Modi government's initiatives in various sectors, including education, health, communication and start-ups, are also aimed at the young and first-time voters. In addition, the party is hoping to reap dividend from its G20 University Connect initiative during India's presidency of the grouping, which helped it connect with 50 million students from schools and skilling centres and 100,000 students from 101 Indian universities. Now, the party has launched a website (pehlavotemodiko.bjp.org) seeking the support of first-timers. The BJP's youth wings have been given tar-
