How do you see the role of real estate in promoting a sustainable and fair future?
At Radhey Group, we specialize in constructing homes and apartments aimed at the middle and lower classes. With over half of India lacking adequate housing, our goal is to provide affordable solutions to this pressing issue.

You've recently entered politics. What led you to this decision?
I've long desired a parliamentary seat, and the TDP has given me the chance to represent Chittoor district in Andhra Pradesh. Since joining politics, I've identified key issues in Chittoor, such as the struggling sugar cane industry, the challenges faced by weaver communities, and the underutilization of granite exports. My aim is to address these issues and improve the socio-economic landscape of the region.

How do you plan to manage your roles as a politician and a business leader?
My son will oversee the company, allowing me to focus entirely on serving my constituency and participating in parliamentary affairs. I'm committed to advocating for policies that benefit the people of Chittoor.

Drawing from your experience as a former IRS officer, can you share any challenges you've faced and how you overcame them?
Transitioning from bureaucracy to entrepreneurship had its challenges, especially navigating the legal complexities of the construction industry. However, through careful diligence and partnerships with public sector banks, we've successfully delivered projects while maintaining quality and meeting deadlines.

What social causes are you passionate about, and what drives your commitment to giving back?
I'm deeply involved in education, healthcare, and environmental conservation. My dedication to social welfare stems from my retirement from government service. By entering politics, I hope to expand my service to benefit more people.

How do you see your social work evolving as you enter politics?
While I've mostly worked independently so far, I believe my involvement in government will allow for larger initiatives benefiting marginalized communities. Running in Chittoor enables me to use parliamentary influence to enact effective policies.

What qualities are essential for effective social impact leadership?
Financial stability and ethical business practices are crucial. Building strong networks and addressing societal challenges are also essential for effective leadership.

How will you balance your time between business and social endeavors?
As I enter politics, my focus will be on serving my constituents. While I'll advise the company, my priority is addressing the needs of the people I represent.

What challenges do you anticipate for the real estate sector regarding government policies and environmental concerns?
The real estate sector faces challenges from inadequate government support and environmental regulations. I advocate for reforms that facilitate financing and encourage sustainable practices.

Can you discuss your company's green initiatives?
We prioritize environmental sustainability in all projects, certified by the Indian Green Building Council. By incorporating green space and eco-friendly designs, we aim to promote well-being and ecological balance.

How do you integrate your roles as chairman, politician, and social advocate?
My goal is to effect positive change at both grassroots and policy levels. Whether it is through policymaking, business practices, or community initiatives, I aim to contribute to societal welfare and sustainable development.
