What will influence her vote: The candidate and his party's vision coffee connoisseurs. A graduate in Economics from the University of Nottingham, and with a Master's in Management from Harvard University, US, she is the only woman specialty coffee roaster in India, a certified Q grader and an authorised SCA trainer.

Ambition and passion shape not just her business instinct but also her voting decision. "The critical issues for me," she says, "revolve around agriculture, economic growth, education, women's empowerment and access to healthcare."

While she does not have a political preference for any specific leader, she admires those who embody integrity, empathy and a genuine commitment toward public welfare with a clear vision for the nation's future. "When deciding my vote, I weigh multiple key factors, including the candidate's profile, qualifications, experience, and track record. Equally important is assessing the party's ideologies, policies and capability to implement them effectively, ensuring alignment with my personal values, priorities and aspirations for the country's progress. It is vital to elect representatives who reflect the ideals and aspirations of their constituents." ■
