Weighing His Choices

When Karan Nagpal turned 18, he was too busy carving out a relatively unconventional career path—floral design. Now 25, Nagpal, son of a librarian father and insurance agent mother, will vote for the first time. Nagpal believes in evaluating every party/ individual on merit. "There are far bigger issues in our country than making temples and building statues. I will look at India's economic growth under each party, their policies, plans to make educational institutes, hospitals and elderly care," says Nagpal, for whom India becoming the world's third largest economy is a collective goal.

He feels India's global image under PM Narendra Modi has improved, but that the current state of Indian democracy is "a bit scary"—both will influence his decision. He finds merit in the Congress's guarantee of right to internship for the youth and recruitment of three million in government jobs. Issues on which he has yet to form an opinion are the caste census, by the Centre, electoral bonds and 'one nation, one election'. ■

- Ridhi Kale

ARUN KUMAR

KARAN NAGPAL, 25

Floral designer

Lok Sabha constituency: South West Delhi

Top 3 demands: Employment creation, legalisation of same sex marriages, updating old laws

What will influence his vote: State of democracy, women's reservation in Parliament, abrogation of Article 370

"There are far bigger issues than building temples. I'll look at India's economic growth under each party"

And Justice for All...

The eldest child of doctor parents, S. Farzeen Rose, a final-year student of Legislative Law in Government Law College in Thiruvananthapuram has strong convictions in politics. Farzeen is unhappy with the state of the nation, and says the denial of justice to the oppressed and lawmakers' disregard for the Constitution leaves her angry. Though a Leftist, Rose thinks Rahul Gandhi can fulfil the dreams of a young India and hopes INDIA gets its act together in a post-poll scenario. For this Lok Sabha election, Farzeen's choice is Pannyan Raveendran, the CPI candidate from Thiruvananthapuram, over sitting Congress MP

VIVEK R NAIR

A LEG-UP FOR START-UPS

GAGANA GANESH, 24

Entrepreneur

Lok Sabha constituency: Bengaluru North, Karnataka

HEMANT MISHRA