

A LITTLE WHITE MUSIC
Tourists take in the sights and traditional sounds of the White Rann of Kutch

It's a short flight from Ahmedabad to Bhuj, but if the flight doesn't take off for some reason as was the case for us, the road trip to India's largest district of Kutch stretches for an entire workday—at least eight hours. If one has spare time, there is much to see along the way: the intricately carved Modhera Sun Temple, the Rani-Ki-Vav, an 11th-century stepwell that appears on our Rs 100 notes, and a fascinating roadside temple where devotees offer water bottles to a parched god. The bottles are then piled to one side in a giant heap for posterity and, apparently, plastic pollution.
