Q+A

Back to the Origin

Artist PARESH MAITY talks about his installation–'Genesis'–at Personal Structures, a biennial art exhibition in Venice

Photograph by BANDEEP SINGH

Q. What is your sculpture at the Marinaressa Gardens in Venice?
'Genesis', the sculpture being showcased at Venice, explores the concepts of life and balance in a world that is ever-evolving. It proposes that different energies come together in harmony where all boundaries and limitations diminish and the world becomes a united space for growth.

Q. What was the inspiration behind it?
I have envisioned 'Genesis' as the origin of the universe, the inception of the whole world and its evolution. The main conceptual framework of the sculpture is rooted in the idea of a united world with societal balance at its core. This was developed over 12 months for the exhibition and is fully cast in bronze.

Q. How does it feel to be exhibiting at Venice?
I am extremely delighted that I was invited by the European Cultural Centre to exhibit my sculpture as part of Personal Structures in Venice and represent my country. India is a country with a rich cultural heritage. I thoroughly believe that the representation of Indian art on platforms like this promotes cross-cultural exchanges and elevates the country's position on the global map.

Q. What are some of the overarching themes in your work? And what's next?
I am an avid traveller, and my works are highly informed by my travels. As I traverse the mountains, the holy ghats of Banaras, the breathtaking lagoons of Venice and places all over the world, I get inspired. These inspirations constitute my oeuvre. I have been working towards a solo show to be held after a year. Meanwhile, there are some public and outdoor projects that I am currently working on.

–With Amit Dixit