popularity in the midst of economic uncertainty? Part of the reason could be what are perceived as the government's successes in different fields in the past eight and a half years. The handling of Covid-19 stood as its top achievement, a remarkable turnaround from the setbacks of the second wave when the government came in for a lot of flak over oxygen shortages and the mounting death toll. The revocation of Article 370 in Jammu and Kashmir and the building of the Ram temple in Ayodhya and the Kashi-Vishwanath corridor in Varanasi are second and third on the list of the government's successes. With both of these being core issues for its Hindutva support base, the government gets a big thumbs up for delivering on them. Those surveyed also acknowledge the good job the government has done with its welfare schemes, providing a relatively corruption-free government and developing infrastructure. Surprisingly, though, none of the latter achievements cross a double-digit percentage.

Another major reason that Modi and his government remain favourites to win a record third term in 2024 is that the prime minister is perceived to be sincere, trustworthy, a 24x7 leader and, unlike Manmohan Singh, has no major scandals besieging his government. The prime minister seems to be constantly 'in the zone', hard-focusing on tackling key crises and development issues that have cropped up in his reign. He has rarely taken his eyes off the ball and has been unafraid
