public demand for handouts and cash in the bank.

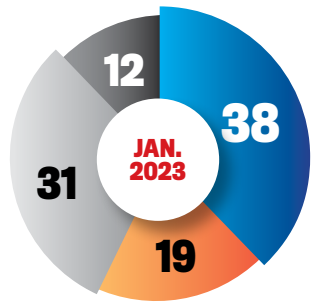

On the situation in Jammu and Kashmir, the percentage of respondents who want statehood and Article 370 restored after the government revoked it in August 2019 has gone up from 26 in January 2022 to 34 this time. While 62 per cent of the respondents support the demand for restoring statehood, nearly half, or 49 per cent, do not want Article 370 to be reinstated. The big message: it is time statehood was restored to Jammu and Kashmir, but not Article 370.

CASTE AND RELIGION

In India, marriage remains a key factor when it comes to society and happiness. However, there is a noticeable divide in the public view towards inter-faith marriages. While nearly 70 per cent support inter-religious marriages (with 41 per cent adding that the religious identity of both must be known to both parties), 53 per cent of the respondents believe that Muslim men are marrying Hindu women as part of a larger conspiracy to turn India into an Islamic state, what is termed 'love jihad'. There is also great support for inter-caste marriages, with 76 per cent backing them. Traditional barriers such as caste and religion seem to be narrowing today when it comes to marriage. The misgivings towards 'love jihad' seem to be more about a lack of trust in the Muslim community than an attitude towards marriage.

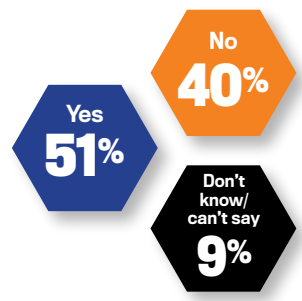

According to a 2013 study by the Population Association of America, a US-based organisation that studies issues related to population and demography, about 10 per cent of the total marriages in India take place between different castes, while only 2.1 per cent of marriages are inter-religious. Reports of such couples facing harassment continue to come from across the country. The most recent case involved a well-respected
