Linking regenerative agriculture to farmers' income and human nutrition

In this initiative, growing food does not add to toxification of the soil because of overuse of pesticide and chemical fertilisers but instead adds to the income of farmers through reduction in cost of inputs and/ or improved prices of produce. This goes beyond the idea of organic agriculture, which has captured the imagination of the rich in the country but does little to address the prospect of agrarian distress and malnutrition.

Citizens' movements

This is the biggest highlight of the country's environment movement. It is often viewed as obstructionist or unnecessary but the clamour of voices has been loudest in the fight to protect the environment and to find ways of regenerating it and building livelihoods from its management. This is the soul of the movement. Environmentalism is about the deepening of democracy, it's not a techno-fix.
