RELYING ON A 3-D APPROACH

Digitisation, diversification and diversity. IIM-K has built on these triple attributes to impart wholesome management education

By Jeemon Jacob

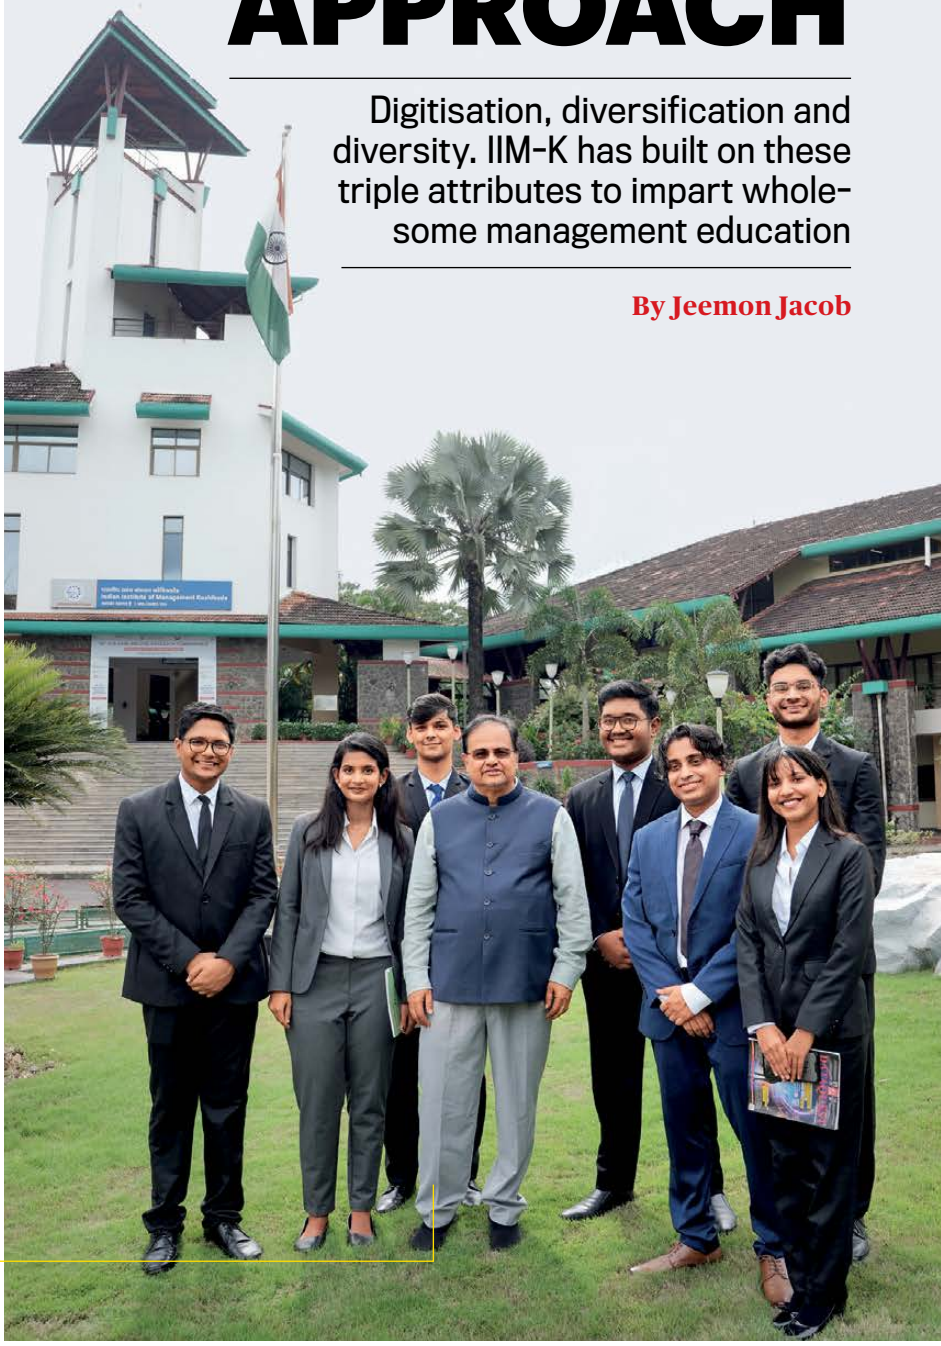

On the vibrant, green hilltop campus of the Indian Institute of Management-Kozhikode (IIM-K), butterflies flutter about freely. Just as caterpillars metamorphose to take flight, students here evolve, nurturing dreams and building skills that prepare them to soar globally. Nestled in the remote Kunnamangalam village of Kerala's Kozhikode district, IIM-K has in its 28 years developed a strong reputation as one of India's leading business schools. Founded in 1996 through a collaboration between the Indian and Kerala governments, the institute began with 42 students and has since grown to a vibrant community of 1,300 students and 169 faculty members. Today, it is a premier business school, serving corporations worldwide.

IIM-K director Dr Debashis Chatterjee attributes the institute's rise to what he calls the "3 Ds" of success: Digitisation, Diversification and Diversity. Digitisation was a vital first step, considering

GURUSPEAK

"Our job is to make students employable, not to give them jobs. Our mission is to churn out competent and compassionate professionals who are imbued with the Indian way of looking at the world because there's so much happening below the poverty line. There is a sensitivity that is necessary for a competent manager"
