Help is reaching directly to the underprivileged, this is the vision of 'Nava Chhattisgarh'

Balanced Growth with social and economic justice

Four years ago, a new government was formed in Chhattisgarh under the leadership of Chief Minister Bhupesh Baghel. The government put the vision of 'Nava Chhattisgarh' in front of the general public. According to this vision two major objectives were to be accomplished. First, to ensure social and economic justice to all the underprivileged, and second, to establish a balance of development between villages and cities. In fact, Chief Minister Bhupesh Baghel believes that development will remain weak until there is no social and economic balance. Under his leadership, justice schemes were formulated with a visionary policy aimed at delivering justice to the last deprived person of the society. To what extent the vision of building 'Nava Chhattisgarh' has been accomplished in these four years, if it has to be investigated, it has to be seen whether the deprived got justice, and also whether the balance of development between cities and rural areas is established.

Economic strength through justice schemes

The Government started justice schemes to provide social and economic justice to the deprived sections. These justice schemes emphasize on providing cash economic benefits directly to the targeted communities, so that the income of these communities increases and they become financially strong. The work of economic strengthening is considered primary and essential for the social strengthening of the communities. Through steps like Rajiv Gandhi Kisan Nyay Yojana, Godhan Nyay Yojana, Rajiv Gandhi Rural Landless Agricultural Laborer Nyay Yojana, promotion of productive activities in rural areas, promotion of productivity and entrepreneurship, procurement and processing of minor forest produce, the government has helped the deprived communities in four years. An amount of Rs 1.5 lakh crore has been transferred directly through their bank accounts. The major impact of these justice schemes was that for the growth of Chhattisgarh's economy, dependence on cities only ended and there was a big jump in the contribution of rural areas. To strengthen the economy, the dependence on mineral-based industries also decreased, and the contribution of medium, small, cottage and non-polluting industries to the economy increased.

Financial assistance of Rs 1,50,000 crore has so far been provided to farmers, landless agricultural laborers, minor forest produce collectors, beneficiaries of various schemes including the Godhan Nyaya Yojana.
