THERE ARE TWO ASPECTS to this [the consecration of the Ram temple]. The important thing is to assess what messages people get out of these events. The larger message is that the prime minister has successfully conveyed the idea that this marks an important step in redefining Indian civilisation. It is seen as a new start, a boost of self-confidence and in some ways the culmination of the struggle for independence which has been on for over 500 years. The simpler message that goes down to the ordinary people is that Ram was living in a tented accommodation, displaced from his birthplace, and this was the final outcome of the bold steps taken by various people over the years.
