MORE FRIENDS THAN EVER, BUT LONELY!

These are changing times. Unprecedented transformations in social structures were observed during the recent COVID pandemic. What was usually the meeting arenas in society went under locked doors. Schools, cafés, restaurants, workplaces, travel all came to a sudden halt. Transportation became severely restricted. These pervasive distressing experiences led to the development of loneliness. Important social connections, which are so vital to human health, instantly became deficient. A panacea to this unforeseen ill was the availability of the social media. These gave some reprieve in the middle of seemingly unending layers of the despair of not meeting our loved ones, for that matter, even some random faces on the street.

Yamini Talari is a highly experienced computer applications professional, mainly working in the realm of solution management in relation to complex finances across medical, life sciences and automobile industries.

Originally trained from Gayatri Vidya Parishad affiliated with Andhra University, she has extensively contributed to business cycles by leading large teams as senior project manager and decision-making initiatives. She remains affiliated with her home base at Wipro, and currently operates out of Austin, Texas in the United States. Her global clientele includes venerable names including Apple, Inc, Cantel Medical, Ericsson and BMW. Her extensive managerial experience spans across such renowned names including Tata Consulting Services and Accenture. Naina Routh caught up with her to bring forth her vision

