

The EQB 350 started the West leg from the Indo-Pak border in the Thar desert (top), while the GLE 53 Coupe visited the Thiksey monastery in Leh. Driving up from the south, the GLA drove on the NH 44 - India's longest highway (below)

Mercedes-Benz SUVs were so well suited to their environs, be it the GLE 53 AMG that took on some of the highest passes in the world proving that modern AMGs aren't just trackbred tyre-smokers but reliable practical vehicles or to the other end of the spectrum where the EQB 350 proved that electric cars aren't just city cars, with the EQB making it to the remotest parts of the country and the blistering heat of the Thar desert, and crossing it without any fuss. The drive culminated in Delhi at the iconic Bharat Mandapam, another symbol of India's arrival on the global stage. Our drive not only showcased the diversity of our country, but also, how suited Mercedes-Benz's range of SUVs are to this incredible country.
