RANI RUDRAMA DEVI: VIGNAN'S APPROACH TO HOLISTIC EDUCATION AND EMPOWERMENT

Q What are the typical challenges one has to face as a woman leader in the education sector?

I believe that leadership in education is not influenced by gender. Educating young children is a very important and responsible job. Today a child of the second-grade has to thrive in a society, say, in the year 2040. To understand what skills he would need for it and how equipped he should be mentally and emotionally for it is a very challenging question. So a leader should not just think of the present, but also of future with far-sightedness and give a proper vision and direction for the institution.

Particularly in our institutions, where majority of the parent community hail from different economic strata and groups of society, it is believed that access to good education is the only way to rise above the prejudices in the society, be it of gender, caste, class or something else. So naturally they have numerous expectations from an institution like ours.

To make every educator feel the role they are playing in working for this noble cause and make them ethically and morally committed to their job is the responsibility of a capable leader in education. It requires a careful balancing of leadership quality with empathy, humanitarian outlook and a strong commitment to the cause of education.

Q What are the core principles of your institution that led for its long run?

Vignan has been a beacon of integrity and uncompromising values for the past 47 years. Beyond a focus on academic excellence, our primary commitment lies in nurturing strong values and character among our students.

Despite our long-standing tenure in the education field, we, at Vignan don't adhere to any practice irrationally. We foster an environment where everyone is encouraged to test and challenge the norms, strive for improvement, and think of and introduce innovative practices. This commitment to constant evolution and growth is reflected in the ever-changing aspects of our curriculum, infrastructure, practices, pedagogy, and integration of technology.

Teachers at Vignan struggle with the continuous challenge of unlocking the creative potential of each and every child through their own subjects. To address this, we conduct regular brain-storming sessions and orientation programs .These efforts aim at bringing out the best both in the educators and the students.

At Vignan, our legacy is not just about longevity; it's about embracing change, fostering innovation, and ensuring that our students not only excel academically but also emerge as full fledged individuals poised for success in the dynamic landscape of the future. With these right priorities at our core, we proudly hold the distinction of being the largest chain of CBSE schools with incomparably spacious campuses in AP and Telangana.

Q As a leader, how do you empower women in your organization?

Our organisation is truly fortunate in having a workforce in which 90% are women, women, known for their multi-tasking capabilities, disciplined approach in life and
