

Once Upon a Time at the Bagh; and (below) Baradari in Jaipur

COURTESY: OUAT

ALAMY

JAIPUR

'Pink City' Jaipur is punctuated with magnificent palaces and forts reminiscent of its regal past. While most of these heritage structures are filled with travellers keen on history and architecture—there are also gastronomes who wish to relive the times bygone through food.

For them, there are spaces like Baradari. The alfresco restaurant inside City Palace Jaipur is one of the most sought-after destinations for royal dining. Marked by its characteristic white-and-black patterned floor, Baradari serves as the perfect setting for a romantic evening with your beloved. From smoked laal maas with baati to pyaaz ki kachori with mozzarella and caramelised onions, the diner offers traditional Rajasthani food, albeit with a contemporary twist.

Another must-visit is Once Upon a Time at The Bagh that sits atop the Vidyadhar ka Bagh, previously known as Neel Mahal. The 350-year-old palace and vineyard set against the backdrop of the Aravalli range is dotted with Mughal gardens and fountains. It also has an outdoor pavilion, Jalsa, with gazebo-style seating.

MUMBAI

A stroll through Mumbai's streets is likely to take you down memory lane. After all, there are plenty of Art Deco buildings that tower over the maximum city's skyline and command attention for their stunning architecture. Some of these structures also house art galleries and institutions that have stood the test of time and continue to be the city's