"INDIA NAVIGATES THE WORLD WITH STRATEGIC AUTONOMY AND MULTI-DIMENSIONAL PARTNERSHIP. SO, IT'S FOR INDIA TO DECIDE WHERE IT FITS INTO THESE PARTNERSHIPS FOR US"

PHILIP GREEN Australia's High Commissioner to India and Ambassador to Bhutan

"When we speak of bodies like the Quad, where we are all in it together as sister democracies, we are talking of an agenda for human development and human security. I don't really know if China has got that entirely right"

NIRUPAMA RAO
Former Foreign Secretary of India

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- The Indo-Pacific will be a defining area of the world and India one of its main drivers of prosperity
- Along with China and the US, India is going to be a crucial global player in coming decades
- The Ukraine war has affected the world—from fertiliser prices in Punjab to grain prices in Africa
- Indo-US relations have true bilateral support; who is in the White House won't affect it
- There's bipartisan support in the UK for a deeper economic relationship with India

British High Commissioner to India Alex Ellis said that the Indo-Pacific would be the defining area of the world, with growing focus on the drivers of prosperity "and India is definitely one of them".

On the Khalistan separatist movement, both Green and Ellis committed to draw red lines when it involved violence and threats to Indian diplomats.

Garcetti said India-US ties continue to be strong despite the alleged conspiracy to murder Gurpatwant Singh Pannun. The US had expressed its concerns about the Citizen Amendment Act (CAA), inviting a backlash from India. Garcetti said that while the US was mindful of India's security needs, it "can't give up on principles, as religious freedom and equality was a cornerstone of democracy". Former foreign secretary Nirupama Rao said that "when we talk of the Quad, we are in this as sister democracies". She said its shared agenda of human development and security was possibly not something "China got entirely right". ■
