six months. Moreover, just 33 per cent say that their economic status has improved under PM Modi. For the majority (over 64 per cent), it has either remained the same or even deteriorated.

However, public perception of Modi's economic management is more favourable compared to Manmohan Singh's during the United Progressive Alliance era. A significant 57.4 per cent of the respondents believe Modi has handled the economy better, while 35 per cent feel Singh did a superior job.

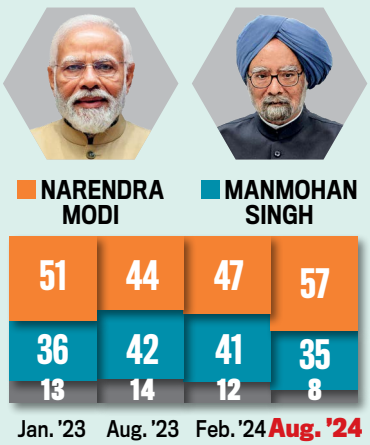

Despite growing at a faster rate than other big economies in the world, India will still need broad-based, sustained high growth over the next several years to ensure the benefits reach the millions of its citizens. India's annual per capita income of around $2,700 (Rs 2.24 lakh) remains significantly lower than the more than $13,800 (Rs 11.46 lakh) seen in high-income economies. The scarcity of quality jobs, coupled with India's over-reliance on low-paying agricultural work and high inflation, has kept household
