

GETTY IMAGES

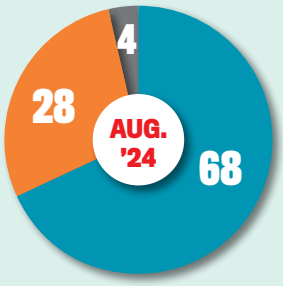

Q. Will you support a four-day work week even if you have to work extra every day to complete stipulated 40 work hours?

Yes No DK/CS

The majority response points at long commuting hours, need for leisure

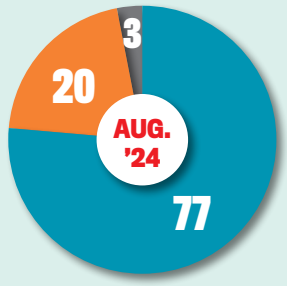

Q. Do you think work from home should be given as an option to employees?

Yes No DK/CS

Nearly 70 per cent say yes to the idea, saying it makes people more productive

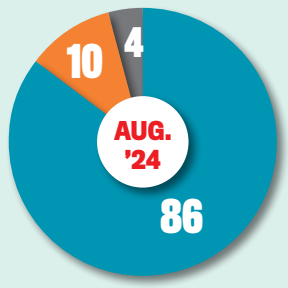

Q. Do you think paternity leave must be made mandatory in private sector jobs in India?

Yes No DK/CS

The suggestion gets an overwhelming response as old norms of parenting change

Q. Do you think women should get menstrual leave?

Yes No DK/CS

There is consensus across the gender divide on this issue

All figures in % and rounded off, DK/CS: Don't know/ can't say

85%

of the male respondents support the idea of menstrual leave for women

Raunak Munot, co-founder, Trove Experiences, Pune. "If I tell you about my huge office cabin, you might like it, but there is no shared sense of awe. But if I tell you about an experience I had, there is that sense of awe because you can do it too."

Work-life balance isn't only about entertainment and experiences outside the office. It is also about the space given to employees to invest in their health.

YES TO PATERNITY LEAVE

Almost 80 per cent of the MOTN respondents agreed that paternity leave should be made mandatory. Additionally, 85.6 per cent felt women employees should be given menstrual leave, with 85.3 per cent of the male respondents also supporting the idea. "Women face the pressure that they should be able to do it all—office, house work, personal health management. Supporting women's health first starts with reducing this pressure and understanding if someone has extreme period pain or is going through a tough menopause, and offering them that time for rest," says Dr Priya Patil, a gynaecologist at Altius Hospitals in Bengaluru.

Despite their strong preferences for work from home, more leisure time and emphasis on health, a majority of the respondents (74 per cent) believe their current job allows them the chance to have a work-life balance. Clearly, the situation isn't so dire that there is no personal time left, but there is certainly room for improvement. ■