purring the minute he smells the shampoo. He is yet to allow us to cut his nails, but we will get there. Adopting a pet is hard work especially when they are older and some behaviour has set in. You have to be very patient, understanding and willing to devote a lot of time towards training them well," Sehgal says.

Also appealing to pet and parent vanity alike is 26-year-old Prathima Pingali, who combined her passion for pets and photography to start Pawparazzi in 2018. She had to initially move from Hyderabad to Mumbai because she couldn't find clients for her business in her home town. Her ideas found a welcome and a thriving business in Mumbai. "I now do 12-15 outdoor shoots a month, whether for pet birthdays, maternity shoots or newborn baby shoots," says Pingali, who travels the country in her professional pursuit. A one and a half hour shoot with the pet can cost Rs 19,500. Pet parents find it worth their while since Pingali has trained herself to handle different breeds, temperaments and situations. "The people are just props," she says of her endeavours. "The dog is always the hero."

"IF YOU DON'T MEET A DOG'S NEEDS, HOW CAN YOU EXPECT THEM TO MEET YOURS?"

Cashing in on pet parents' desire to give their charges the best are hotel chains that now offer petcations—specialised stay packages for pets. Forty-two-year-old Delhi textile exporter Shankar Chaudhary reveals how his six-year-old poodle Khushi loves their frequent trips to the Tree of Life in Dehradun. "And it makes me happy to know I can share my travel experiences with him," says Chaudhary. At the hotel, Khushi gets food bowls, gourmet chicken, a pollen-free room and pure cotton linen. "He has a sensitive nose and skin," says Chaudhary.
