Seen as an IT hub, touted as the silicon valley of India, the city welcomes all things modern and new. However, Jayanagar in Bangalore still upholds the old Bangalore charm. So, when a Bangalore born and raised couple wanted to build their home in Jayanagar, they were sure they wanted a house that adapts to the changing urbanscape. Our solution? Building an inward looking house covered by permeable spaces.

We call the home Anugraha. It is Sanskrit for grace; and it is this grace that is reflected in the overall architecture and interiors. Curved elements, brick and terracotta jali that age gracefully all add to the overarching theme of the home.

Essentially Anugraha is a 4BHK house, spread over three storeys. The first floor has semi-private spaces of the home, where the exteriors are clad with a terracota jali
